College Textbook Rentals- Advantages Over Buying

College textbook rentals represent a growing trend within the higher education sector. In the old days of acquiring textbooks, students were often at the mercy of their school's skewed pricing standards. College professors, who had written books of their own and then charged exorbitant fees while making a purchase mandatory was one such abuse. Textbook companies could also barter with schools and professors to require students to buy an overpriced product for no other reason than to exploit the free enterprise system. While the word "free" may have been appropriate for the schools and the textbook companies, there was nothing free about what it meant for the students. It was not unlikely for tabs to escalate into the four-digit range, a price that students and their families could not afford.

Then along came the idea of the college textbook rental and sites such as CheapBookRenter, one of the more popular book renting websites, that placed power back into the hands of the student. Textbook rentals work like this: the student takes his syllabus to a nearby computer, visits the website, and types in the book information to the onsite search engine. At that point, there are a variety of locations from which the student may rent the textbook at a much lower price. Cutting the cost of books down to a small fraction of the purchase price brings with it many advantages.

The first is the obvious savings that a student or his family can enjoy. By being able to compare different locations where the textbook is available, the student is able to guarantee that he pays the lowest price possible. There is also no danger of doing without, since many sites like CheapBookRenter police their transactions to ensure the integrity of the service. In other words, you will have your book when you need it.

Another advantage of these services is that they force a more reasonable standard of pricing in the textbook community. While a great deal of research does go into piecing together a textbook and then there are the printing costs to contend with, the markup on these books is often far more than what is reasonable for profit. And the ones paying are those who can least afford it. Giving the strapped for cash student an affordable alternative ensures a more fair and equitable business practice.

If you are a student, or you are financially assisting one through college, then you can stand to benefit from the ways that modern technology has improved life for those who most deserve it. By harnessing the power of sites like CheapBookRenter, you can take control of the out of control textbook industry and pay a fair price without jeopardizing your education.

Cheap College Textbooks Online

Buying your textbooks for college can be one of those pull your hair out moments where you start to question how bookstores can be allowed to charge you $100 or more for a single book. While the textbook publishers claim they have to charge so much on account of all the research and production costs that goes in to their textbook, the reality is that college books are still very much a moneymaking venture, and the people funding this out of control industry are the ones less equipped to pay for it than anyone else. If you are frustrated by the racket, and you are ready to take back some of your hard earned money, then you should look no further than sites like CheapBookRenter.com designed to connect students with the books they need at a much more affordable rental rate than what it would cost to purchase.

The good thing about using sites like CheapBookRenter.com is that you can pay a price for your book that you can actually live with. You may even be able to sell some of your own books for extra money. Another advantage is that you don't actually have to hold on to a book that you don't want and won't use in the future. Rental gives you every reason to avoid purchases, and it can actually help you find an additional revenue stream to help pay for college.

CheapBookRenter is a site that allows students to search for the book they need or search by category. Once the book has been located, the student can simply rent books they need at the price they want. After paying the nominal fee, the sender will then ship the book to the receiver, who may then use the book for the specified time before sending it back to its original destination.

CheapBookRenter may also be able to facilitate sales or extended rental periods if the receiver feels they may need the book longer than originally expected. Leaving one's options open means no more paying $200 for a book only to get $15 in return from a used bookstore. By embracing the power of technology and taking advantage of services such as this, the playing field is starting to change in favor of the student. For too long, students have been forced to pay higher tuition fees, higher room and board fees, and exorbitant textbook costs. Where does it all end?

CheapBookRenter attempts to answer that question with a simple word: "Now." While you may not be able to control the increasing costs of education, you do have options when it comes to the tools of your education. Using sites like these means paying far less money in the long run.

4 Ways To Earn Money Selling And Renting Books Online

Textbooks are among the most expensive items you will ever have to buy for college, and it can often be difficult and aggravating when you pay $200 for one book that you'll be lucky to get $20 out of when you get ready to sell it back. Likewise, books in general are one of those purchases that, once they fulfill their purpose, it's hard to justify keeping them around. If you have a mountain of textbooks or regular books that you want to get rid of, but you don't want to "get taken" by a greedy bookstore, then your best option is to sell online. If you are ready to take back some of the small fortune that you have spent over the years on the volumes in your collection, then there are five ways you can work toward it.

First of all, consider selling textbooks online to other needy college students. The great thing about the Internet is that it has opened up many avenues for those looking to connect with willing buyers who are willing to give more for a book than 10 percent of its face value. Selling online allows you to make, at minimum, about twice what you will get from a bookstore that buys books back from students and owners.

Secondly, try renting textbooks out at a discount rate. You may enter into a contract with your customers that they may use the book for a rental fee over a certain amount of time before the book is sent back to you for rental to someone else. You may not get as much from one user as you would if you sold the book, but you can certainly make more from one volume over time.

Thirdly, try to sell to local university students by going to campus and posting flyers for all to see. Make sure that your contact information is readily available, so they don't have a hard time getting hold of you. It doesn't have to be anything fancy as long as you make it clear which books you have. You don't even have to make pricing available until you get an opportunity to speak with a potential buyer.

Fourthly, try to utilize social media sites like Facebook, MySpace, and Twitter to let those in your network who may be taking the same classes at a later date or going to the same school that you have a variety of helpful books available. When you get a bite try to sell other books that you wouldn't mind getting rid of at an extra discount.

With creativity and research, it's possible to turn one of the most expensive college experiences into one of the most profitable.
